Monroe County Community College will break ground on a major construction project to transform two 1960s-era buildings into a single, modern facility specifically designed to foster student success. The twin East and West Technology buildings – which once housed industrial technology programs that are now based in the Career Technology Center – will be combined into a single facility that will house numerous services geared toward student success, state-of-the-art classrooms and computer labs, an abundance of adaptable student lounge and collaboration spaces, private student group work areas, and several student services and academic departments.
