I think I wrote something about it to them, and I should like much to hear from them as often as they have a mind to write. You ought to see our boys as they look now. We are about the most splendid set of men you ever saw. Half cavalry and half infantry. I am all infantry yet until we get our horses and sabers. Then I'll join on cavalry style. I am in hopes that Grant will soon succeed in cutting the confederacy in two again. Though perhaps not until spring when he does that again I shall begin to dread the time when the rebel rag must come down. I do not look for much trouble now.
