As we came to the bridge to cross the Potomac we met a string of Ambulance as much as a "Y" mile long. They consisted from 1 to 4 connected cars, then we met a train of cars which contained a great many. I tell you it was a hard fight. As you can scarce imagine is a great sight — going on, they are continually bringing in the ammunition that is to Washington. Some times the battle seems to go one way, then again it turns to the other way, at least they say to you don't know what a beautiful sight it is to behold the scenery from. When I sit I can see the Capitol, which is since 10 or 12 miles distant. The Valley of the Potomac, then the gradual ascent from the river back to high elevations on many of which, at some fortifications upon which the stars and stripes float which we can see for miles away. Then you can see the distant hill top on their slopes 1 in the valley containing village of hundreds of thousands of tents, large cannon, army wagons, immense numbers of cattle those 1 & 2 miles are to be seen.
